DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Clark/Vogel house is approached by a long private road running south from Md. Rt. 175. The Baltimore-Washington Parkway lies approximately 375' to the east of the house, which is a two-story frame structure, five bays wide and one bay deep, facing west. The entrance is centered in the principal facade and features a paneled surround with sidelights and transom; two floor-to-ceiling sash windows are evenly spaced on either side. A half-hipped porch with chamfered posts and scrollwork brackets spans the facade. On the second story, the central bay holds a tripartite window surmounted by a triangular pediment which projects outward on four brackets; four 6/6 sash windows, aligned over the first-floor openings, complete the fenestration on this level. The latter windows, and their counterparts in the south gable (one centered on each story) all have shallow peaked lintels suggesting pediments. The roof is an unusual half-hipped form whose ridge is aligned with the rear wall of the house; viewed from the west, this presents an impression of great depth. The broad overhanging cornice is bracketed, and features a frieze punctuated by low rectangular windows. These vents or casements conform to the pattern established by the other fenestration, and are decorated with cast-iron grilles in the form of laurel wreaths.

Present siding is asbestos shingle, with asphalt shingles covering the roof. Interior chimneys rise from the rear edge of the roof on both the north and south slopes.

A lower addition constructed of concrete blocks extends to the rear; this section also features an unusual half-hipped roof, somewhat more steeply pitched than than of the main section. The concrete blocks are textured to resemble rough-cut stone, with an imitation of fine rusticated ashlar quoins and lintels at the windows.

SPECIFIC DATES	BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This building represents a unique combination of Greek Revival and Italianate architectural elements embellishing a traditional, conservative basic farmhouse form. It gains additional significance when viewed in relation to several neighboring buildings which are more complete expressions of the Italianate style, e.g. Ringgold House (AA-92) and Trusty Friend (AA-123).

This may be the E. Clark residence indicated on Hopkins' 1878 map.
